

Judges with backgrounds in immigration defense were found to be more likely to be fired than judges who had worked with DHS. Adding to the long list of oppressive maneuvers the administration has made, the sweeping practice of packing courtrooms with as many cases as possible has taken place in Chicago, Boston, and soon Dallas.

These hyper-accelerated “mega master” hearings come as the Trump Administration announced the goal to deport 1,000,000 people per year. Vanessa Dojaquez-Torres of AILA states, "The major concern is that [since] this is going to be a group of people without attorneys, that they're not going to have gotten proper notice."

The system is setting up many immigrants for failure, with little to no notice being sent out for court dates, and if attendance is dramatically ramped up, court staff and judges will be overwhelmed. Immigrants who do not have a lawyer in these courts are not likely to see benefits from rushed deadlines and increased pressure. “They're anticipating that the majority will not show up and they'll just be able to say that they completed X number of cases because they'll be in absentia orders of removal,” said one Texas-based immigration attorney.

Help us stand up against unfair practices from the administration, and build a better future for the next generation by keeping families together.
